Explore the Amazon rainforest from the perspective of its animal inhabitants

How does a poison dart frog perceive its environment? How does it feel to navigate through the dense jungle at night as a vampire bat?

In the water, in the undergrowth, high above the treetops or in the air at night: the virtual reality experience Inside Tumucumaque allows visitors to immerse themselves in the fascinating world of the Amazon, to discover its native wildlife in their natural habitat and experience the way they perceive the world.

With the help of ultraviolet color spectra, movements in super slow motion, visualizations of echo sounder locations and colour night vision as well as spatial 3D sound, the perception of animals is interpreted as a sensual experience comprehensible for the human perception system.

The virtual reality experience will be available at Hamburger Bahnhof – Museum für Gegenwart – Berlin during the last week of the exhibition How to talk with birds, trees, fish, shells, snakes, bulls and lions.

More on Filmtank

The multiple award-winning production company with offices in Hamburg, Berlin and Ludwigsburg originally produced documentary films, but today produces a whole galaxy of content. While the Hamburg and Ludwigsburg sites mainly develop films for cinema, the Berlin office specialises in cross-media content. Filmtank’s productions have received numerous international awards, including the groundbreaking cross-media project Netwars – Out of Control.

All Filmtank productions share one common goal: to overcome boundaries, creatively explore significant themes and broaden horizons.
